Scientifics investigate about Friendship

Friendship protects from bullying

Research with more than 533 10-year-olds showed that those who had a "best friend" had a lower risk of bullying.

"Even more crucial to protecting children was the quality of a true friendship that defends us from attack"

(Dunn, 86)

Abstract

Bullying is an aggressive behavior among school-aged children. Bullying is repeated over time and includes behaviors such as hitting, breaking someone's things, name-calling, spreading rumors, or posting someone's private photos online. Researchers all over the world have found that children who are bullied may have serious health problems, including depression, anxiety, sadness, sleep and eating problems, and decreased performance in school. Psychological studies can help to prevent these serious problems, by analyzing which factors put a child at risk of being bullied. Using anonymous

Abstract

Bullying is an aggressive behavior among school-aged children. Bullying is repeated over time and includes behaviors such as hitting, breaking someone's things, name-calling, spreading rumors, or posting someone's private photos online. Researchers all over the world have found that children who are bullied may have serious health problems, including depression, anxiety, sadness, sleep and eating problems, and decreased performance in school. Psychological studies can help to prevent these serious problems, by analyzing which factors put a child at risk of being bullied. Using anonymous questionnaires, we asked children aged 10–12 years old to report if they were suffering some kind of bullying and how they felt about their relationships both in and out of school (for example, how easily they become friends with other children). We wondered if bullying could happen even in a circle of good friends. We can use the information learned in this study to promote prevention programs in schools, to advise children about how to deal with bullying.

Tarjetas de amistad

If he messes with you, he likes you

Friends are always good to each other

Those who fight desire each other

We all have to be friends

(after a violent situation)
He is your friend, give him a hug

If he hits you he is not your friend
